The Vulcan to the Sky Trust was responsible for the one of the most ambitious and memorable aviation restoration projects ever, returning a large and complex four-engine jet bomber to the air some 14 years after it left RAF service – bringing Avro Vulcan XH558 back to our skies.

To do this in the middle of a deep recession, climbing a mountain of financial and technical hurdles and then operating the aircraft safely for eight years in air displays around the UK has left millions of people with fond memories to cherish for life, many of whom would never have had an opportunity of seeing a Vulcan fly without this incredible story of perseverance and determination.

Catching even the slightest glimpse of Vulcan XH558 after her return to flight in 2007, right up to her eventual retirement in 2015, was enough to set the heart racing, with people travelling from all over the country to view her majestic shape arc through the skies. Her sight and sound generated what became known as 'The Vulcan Effect'.

At the end of the 2015 flying season, Vulcan XH558 had far exceeded the 250 flying hours promised before her restoration, completing significantly more flying hours than any other aircraft of her type.

No longer able to retain the formal technical support to comply with CAA regulations, she will be kept in superb ground-running condition as the centrepiece of a new visitor and inspirational centre to be built at Doncaster Sheffield Airport, for heritage aircraft, their preservation, restoration and operation, to inspire and educate new generations of young people, focussing on the technical skills that our country needs so badly. Even though she is grounded, XH558 is still fascinating and a powerful example of British innovation.

Over the 10 years the lottery has run, it has had over 1,300 winners, and raised more than £600,000 to date.

- Each entry is allocated 5 draw numbers, giving 60 chances each year to win.
- Entry numbers will be issued in blocks of 5.
- The draw is made on the last Wednesday of each month.

Sign up now, please complete all the sections in the attached entry form and direct debit and return to Vulcan XH558 Lottery Office, Hangar 3, Fourth Avenue, Doncaster Sheffield Airport, Doncaster DN9 3GE.

Do not miss even one chance to win, return your entry today!
